A Lesson From Butte

Few merchants need any education in the value of advertising. Given every other element of success in business, it is absolutely true that in these days no business can succeed without advertising, and it is done skillfully, as most advertising is done nowadays, money spent in advertising is money profitably invested, certain of a substantial return upon the investment.

Yet probably few people realize to what a large extent advertising enters into modern business success. It is no coincidence that the shops and business enterprises that produce the greatest financial success are the greatest advertisers. It is the relation between cause and effect.

The merchants of Butte, Mont., had a little experience along this line recently that was of great value to them, and that will doubtless prove of great value to others.

There was a newspaper strike on in that city, and for a time the newspapers disappeared altogether. Not a single daily paper was issued in Butte or Anaconda for several months. The merchants had been liberal and judicious advertisers in the Butte and Anaconda newspapers, and when this medium of reaching the public failed them, they tried other ways of advertising. Some of them rather liked the idea, because the new ways of advertising were cheaper, or rather they seemed cheaper.

They put their advertisements on the billboards, scattered freely over the city as they are over most cities. They were made as striking as possible and in addition they were changed frequently. In addition the merchants got out dodgers and handbills and sought to interest the public in their bargains in that manner.
With billboards in every block, and with handbills distributed so copiously that they littered the streets, the advertisements got a pretty good circulation, and probably every citizen of Butte that was able to read had his attention called to the wares that were being advertised.

Yet business fell off on every hand.
In many instances merchants suffered losses of 20 per cent in business, and instances were not rare where the decline amounted to 50 per cent. Even the theaters lost 50 per cent of their patronage.

The merchants were unanimous in as-cribing this loss of business to the fact that they had no newspapers in which to place their advertising. The lesson not only showed the inefficiency of billboard advertising, but it showed the necessity of newspaper advertising in the conduct of a modern business enterprise.

It may well be imagined that when the newspapers started up again, as they did recently, the merchants of Butte lost no time in resuming their old line of advertising which had meant so much more to them than they had ever dreamed.—Duluth Herald.

The Steel Magnate's Mother

Mrs. Adeline Corey, the aged mother of William Ellis Corey, president of the Steel Trust, has sought obscurity on a farm, living in a house removed from the main road and about half a mile from Thorndale, a little village on the Pennsylvania railroad, beyond Downing town.

Notwithstanding that her sentiments in her son's divorce and marriage are no secret, Corey's mother, when seen at the farmhouse today, uttered no bitter words against him.

"My son and I are friends," she said, "and his first wife and I are friends. I do not want to break either of these friendships."

With the mother is Corey's sister, Ada, who would not attend the marriage. The girl would not even question her mother about the wedding on the latter's return from New York, remarking that she had no curiosity to know what happened.

"There is one thing I want to say in justice to my son. It is not true that he tried to buy me over with $300,000 or any other sum. It is not true that he tried to buy over his son and his sister. Nothing of the sort was done by him. He knew better."—Philadelphia dispatch to the New York World.

The Tale of a Cloven Foot

At Lamaziere, a small town in the south of France, a young nobleman, a scion of a strict Catholic family of ancient descent but small means, was engaged to be married to the daughter of a well-to-do local lawyer, a Jew. The marriage was to take place yesterday, but a few days ago a rumor reached the ears of the young nobleman's mother to the effect that her future daughter-in-law was afflicted with an infirmity, to wit, a cloven foot.

The pious woman, who had only consented to her son's engagement on account of his marrying into a moneyed family, suggested to him that his fiancée might be the devil in disguise if it were true that she had a cloven foot.

The young man paid a visit to his fiancée's parents and said he was bound as a dutiful son to honor his mother's wishes. He, therefore, asked to be allowed to see his fiancée's bare feet.
The girl's parents refused the young man's request and summarily dismissed him, with the result that the engagement was broken off.—Paris cable to the New York Times.
